Members of Cabinet and Congress Fither Surrender or Are Captured by the Americans.

Leading Insurrectionists Abandoning Contest and Returning to Their Homes-Soldiers Laying Down Arms.

Manilla, Nov. 25.—Senor Buencamino, a former member of the so-called cabinet of Aguinaldo, has been brought to General Otis a prisoner on board the transport Brutus. He had sought refuge in a village near San Fabian with Aguinaldo's hother and son. The natives disclosed his identity to Major Cronin, who captured him.

General Young is still in the mountains on the trail of Aguinaldo.

Bautista, president of the Filipino congrest, oresented himself to General MacArthur teday and formally renounced all further connection with the fusurection. He was one of the influential Filipinos who hesitated at the beginning of the war to which side to cost his left. He was offered a judge-ship of the supreme court, but declined.

He now announces that he desires to accept the position, and says the Filipino congress and cabinet are scattered never to reassemble. Some of the members, he adde have returned to their homes, while others are flying for safety.

the assistance of Aguinaldo against "the common enemy."
It is grue I addressed Aguinaldo as commanding general," General Anderson said. "It was a common form of salutation used by all generals commanding United States troops during correspondence with the Pilipino leader. All this correspondence is a matter of record. I praised Aguinaldo for his prayery in fighting the common enemy in the same letter in which I stated my inability to recognize his civil authority.

The entire corre indence of General miderson, as well a the correspondence of General Merritt with Aguinaido, is finited in the message of the president to the senate, giving details of the rearty with Spain. In a letter written it the arsenal, Cavite, on July 8, 1898, leneral Anderson said:

(Special to The Herald.) Washington, D. C., Nov. 24.—Con-gressman Roberts passed a very busy day at the Metropolitan hotel talking to the many newspaper reporters who that he had no doubt whatever of his retaining his seat. One of the best in-terviews appears in the Evening Star.

He raws:

The legality of my election is beyond all question. I possess all the constitutional quantifications, and am imconvicted of any orime. I am not even laws of my state which would constitute a sufficient offense for my expulsion. The United States law requiring the Edmunds-Tucker oath expired by limitation on the admission of Utah to the United Market the constitution and laws of the state of Utah.

see volunteers, who were mustered out of service on Wednesday, are leaving for their home in detachments. A large number started last night, and the rest will probably get away within the next day or two. The soldiers are traveling as individuals, no organized attempt being made to keep them together, though most of them will go through in large detachments on special trains.

Basis of Settlement.

Basis of Settlement.

The settlement of the question of polygamy by the adoption of the state constitution and the admission of the state into the Union was upon this basis. The demand on the part of the people of the United States, as expressed by their representatives in the passage of the United States, as expressed by their representatives in the passage of the United States and state of Utah should provide by ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the people of the United States and state of Utah, that there should be perfect toleration of religious sentiment, providing that polygamy of plural marriages are forever prohibited. That was the demand of the United States upon the people of Utah. When the constitutional convention came to deal with this proposition, we adopted the very language of the enabling act.

"Here was a system of social life which had obtained for half a century in Utah, and however wrong it may have been esteemed by the people of the United States, there is no question but what its relations were regarded as sacred by the Mormon people. They found themselves involved in moral obligations of which they certainly could not divest themselves and remain at peace with their conscience.

Homes of Plural Wives.

What good could come either to orals or religion by disrupting those intionships which had been formed? What Christian home in the cast would be made more secure in its purity by destroying the homes of these plural wives, whose acceptance of the Mormon marriage system had been based upon the conviction that it was right and was in conformity with the moral ideas of the community in which they lived? I affirm most positively that the state of Ulah has adhered to the settlement of this question. The representative from Utah has not violated that compact, but as he took a somewhat prominent part in framing it, every where and at all times he has held that it should be strictle observed.

> London, Nov. 25.—Thus far the spe-cial dispatches describing the battle of Belmont bear a stereotyped character, proving that the hands of the censor has been at work upon them. They are too incoherent to enable the reader to form an accurate idea of the event to form an accurate idea of the event or to place a proper estimate upon the value of the victory.

All the accounts agree respecting the splendid fighting qualities exhibited on both sides. Nothing could have exceeded the steady courage and pluck of the British infantry in the face of the terrific firs, while the Boor guns were splendidly served, the gunners standing to them with dogged determination, exposing themselves until the very lust moment, and only becoming wild and inaccurate in their aim during the final deadly charge of the British infantry.

All admit, however, that the victory could not be properly followed up and utilized, owing to the want of sufficient cavalry. The pursuit of the defracted enemy by the Fifth Lancers was evidently not very effective, and, curiously enough, while the correspondents report the capture of Boer guns, Lard Metheun's own report omits any mention of such an achievement. One statement says:

"The remnant of the Boer army sought to escape toward the Orange Free State territory."

Boers at Glencoe and Nicholsen's Nek, found their counterpart at the war office here today. Long before the doors of the war office opened, troubled and anxious women and men in all stations in life were assembled here, and when the inquirers were finally admitted, their anxious questions showed they feared that yesterday evening's official builetin, though black enough, had not recorded the full story of the British losses at Beimont.

Up to moon the government officials had issued no further dispatches, and so the nervous distrust of the public remains unalleviated.

General Methuen's message leaves a great deal to be explained. According to all previous facts obtainable as to the relative strength of the forces, the Boers must have been in a decided minority, yet the total British loss, 20 killed, wounded and missing, proves the effectiveness of their resistance, and amply justifies General Methuen's tribute to the courage and skill with which the burghers fought.

The fact that no guns and only forty prisoners were captured by the victors and that the Boers carried off their dead and wounded, shows they retired in an orderly manner, without precipitation or confusion, and that probably the Boer casualties were not numerous, owing to the strength of their position. The destruction of the Boer ammunition captured is taken as an indication that General Methuen occupied the captured position at Belmont and estroyed the Boer supplies in order not to hamper the immediate advance of his Sying column, which is marching in the lightest order.

The road is now presumably open to the Boer position on the Modder river, where the guards, who apparently bore the brunt of yesterday's flighting, will, in all probability, have another chance to get at close quarters with the bayonet.
